The Generation Lab was launched in 2015 as a multipurpose space for exhibiting and promoting contemporary art. Previously an industrial laser laboratory, the building was renovated by renowned Seattle architect Tommy Stinson. His vision was to integrate industrial elements from the building's history with flexible exhibition spaces that accommodate both large and small scale artworks and installations. Exhibitions at Generation Lab feature post war modern and contemporary works of painting, photography, and sculpture from an international roster of artists.
